How to Use This Planner

How to Read This Planner

Every date and clock time in this planner is already set in your own time zone, which is the one thing it personalizes. Nothing here needs converting, and a new Moon can sit on a different calendar day than it does in a planner printed for somewhere else.

Each month takes two pages. The calendar page gives one cell per day, with a disc drawn from how much of the Moon is actually lit that day and a gold bar under the date when a void-of-course window falls inside it; cards below hold the exact new and full Moon, with the sign the Moon stands in at that moment. The second page carries the written month, the void-of-course windows with their start and end times, and room to write.

What Void-of-Course Means

Between the Moon's final exact aspect to another planet and its arrival in the next sign lies a gap. Astrologers call that gap void-of-course, and this planner prints its start and end times in your own time zone.

The mechanism is ordinary geometry. The Moon has finished making contacts in the sign it currently occupies and has not yet reached the one ahead. Reading it as a change of chapter, rather than a hazard, matches the way these pages use it.

NEW MOON*October 10 · 11:50 AM Libra

Beauty and balance carry more weight than usual while the Moon sits in Libra, which suits anything with a visual or social finish.

FULL MOON*October 26 · 12:12 AM Taurus

With the Moon in Taurus, the pace tends to settle: comfort, routine, and anything tangible get more attention than fast-moving plans.

YOUR NATAL MOON Capricorn

Around your birth date the Moon was moving from Capricorn into Aquarius, so treat this as approximate — a birth time would settle it.

NOTES

October 2026

Your October Spread

October often has a noticeably different rhythm from the month before it, particularly where the light changes fast and routines shift indoors. This spread is a good one for finishing rather than starting: use the grid to see which stretches suit wrapping up existing threads before the busier final months of most calendars arrive. If you're tracking a longer project, mark its next milestone in the notes block now rather than waiting until it's overdue. Keep the pace steady instead of front-loading everything.

Void-of-Course in Daily Life

In ordinary daily life, a void-of-course window usually shows up as a stretch that feels a little quieter or slower than the hours around it: plans shift, a reply takes longer to arrive, a meeting gets rescheduled without much drama. None of that needs a story attached to it. Use these windows for the unglamorous parts of a routine: laundry, errands, clearing a backlog, or simply taking a slower pace than the rest of the week allows.

NEW MOON*November 9 · 2:02 AM Scorpio

Scorpio days suit the work you have been putting off because it asks for honesty.

FULL MOON*November 24 · 9:54 AM Gemini

When the Moon sits in Gemini, conversation and correspondence tend to move easily: emails get answered, calls happen, small pieces of information get exchanged and sorted.

November 2026

Your November Spread

Compression is the theme most readers report in the eleventh month: more obligations, less slack. A planner helps here mainly by defending empty space. Before adding anything, mark two or three runs of days on the grid that stay open no matter what, and treat them as already booked. Then fit the rest around them. Void-of-course windows and quieter phases make natural homes for low-stakes tasks, which keeps demanding work from spilling into the space you just protected.

A Short Void-of-Course Window

A short void-of-course window, often just a couple of hours, rarely changes much about a day. If a call or a task happens to land inside one, there's no need to reschedule it around the clock. Treat these brief stretches the way you'd treat any quiet patch in a schedule: fine for wrapping up small things, checking a list, or simply letting a transition between tasks happen without rushing straight into the next one.

December 2026

Your December Spread

Endings are easier when somebody writes them down. Spend a few minutes with the twelfth grid marking what got finished, what got dropped, and what simply changed shape along the way. None of it needs explaining to anyone else. The lunar cycle carries on past the last page regardless of where a calendar happens to stop, which is a decent reminder that no deadline printed in a book is truly final. Let the remaining squares stay mostly empty and let the pace settle where it likes.

What This Planner Does Not Do

Nothing in these pages forecasts your life. The sky here is a rhythm you can plan against, the same way you plan against daylight or a work week: some stretches suit starting, some suit finishing, and knowing which is which in advance is the whole use of a calendar.

So there are no good days and no bad days in this planner, and no window you are told to avoid. Where a phase or a sign is described, it describes the days, not you, and what you do with them stays your call.

NEW MOON*January 7 · 3:25 PM

♑ Capricorn

Responsibility sits closer to the surface as the Moon crosses Capricorn, and it is easier to use than to argue with.

FULL MOON*January 22 · 7:17 AM

♌ Leo

Something in the tone of these days rewards being seen rather than being efficient, and the Moon in Leo is the reason to plan for it.

NOTES

January 2027

Your January Spread

Nothing about the first month of a calendar requires you to solve everything at once, even though blank pages invite that temptation. Give yourself permission to sketch instead of commit. Scan the phase column for the days when your own attention usually runs high, and park the heavier thinking there. Lighter days can hold errands, filing, and the tidying that clears space for real work later. Whatever you write in the notes area now can be revised in a few weeks without any sense of failure.

NEW MOON

February 6 · 10:56 AM AquariusANNULAR SOLAR ECLIPSE

An Aquarius Moon tends to make group projects and new ideas easier to focus on: a brainstorm, a community task...

FULL MOON

February 20 · 6:24 PM VirgoPENUMBRAL LUNAR ECLIPSE

Order is easier to create as the Moon travels through Virgo, so give the window its unglamorous work.

NOTES

February 2027

Your February Spread

Fewer days on the page can work in your favor, provided you stop treating a short month as a smaller version of a long one. Choose a narrow aim and let it occupy most of the squares. Phase icons give you a rhythm to plan against, and matching demanding tasks to the stretches when you tend to have more drive costs nothing to try. Anything you set down on the notes lines works best as a record of what you actually did, rather than a wish list.

A Longer Void-of-Course Window

Stretches that run eight or ten hours, or cover an entire night, offer something more usable than a quick seam. Give them your backlog. Long spans suit sustained, repetitive work with a clear end point: sorting photographs, reconciling receipts, reading through a report you have been carrying around for weeks. When one covers your sleeping hours it costs nothing at all. When it covers a working day, build that day around maintenance and completion.

NEW MOON*March 8 · 4:30 AM Pisces

Pisces Moon days tend to soften and slow the mood: creative or intuitive work, tying off loose ends...

FULL MOON*March 22 · 6:44 AM Libra

Beauty and balance carry more weight than usual while the Moon sits in Libra, which suits anything with a visual or social finish.

NOTES

March 2027

Your March Spread

March carries the turn of a season in much of the world, and the shift in daylight alone can change how a week feels even before you check the grid. This is a natural point to revisit goals set earlier and swap out anything that clearly isn't working. Use the calendar to line up steadier days with tasks that need follow-through, and busier-feeling stretches with anything that benefits from momentum. Keep the notes section for the specific swaps you decide to make, not a rewrite of your whole plan.

NOTES

April 2027

Your April Spread

April tends to carry a sense of forward motion, whether that comes from lighter evenings, a new school term, or simply having a full quarter of the year behind you to look back on. Use this spread to check whether the pace you set earlier still fits, and adjust the notes block accordingly rather than starting over. The daily grid is worth a slower read this month: a few small shifts in how you're using it can save real time across the weeks ahead. Keep changes practical and specific.

May 2027

Your May Spread

May often sits between two moods: the push of spring projects and the pull toward slower, warmer days. This spread is a reasonable place to separate the two rather than letting them blur together on one long list. Look at where the busier and quieter stretches fall on the grid, and sort tasks accordingly instead of spreading everything evenly across the month. If travel or a break is coming later in the year, this is a fair month to start the practical groundwork for it in the notes space.

Waning Crescent

Only a thin arc stays visible, low in the eastern sky shortly before sunrise, and within days even that disappears. Scheduling lightly is reasonable here. Keep meetings short, leave gaps between tasks, and put work that tolerates interruption into these squares rather than work that does not.

Reflection fits well too. A short review of the cycle now makes the planning you do at the next new Moon considerably faster. A slow stretch is part of the design of a month, not time lost from it.

NEW MOON*June 4 • 3:40 PM*♊ Gemini

When the Moon sits in Gemini, conversation and correspondence tend to move easily: emails get answered, calls happen, small pieces of information get exchanged and sorted.

FULL MOON*June 18 • 8:45 PM*♐ Sagittarius

Horizons widen as the Moon moves through Sagittarius, and the planner is a good place to put that to use.

NOTES

June 2027

Your June Spread

June marks roughly the midpoint of the calendar year for most planners, which makes it a natural checkpoint rather than a month to fill with brand-new commitments. Use the grid to see how the month's lunar rhythm lines up with any deadline you're tracking, and use the notes space to jot down what's actually working so far. Longer daylight in many regions tends to stretch the feel of each day, so don't assume a slower calendar automatically means a slower month.

NEW MOON*July 3 · 11:02 PM Cancer

Privacy feels more valuable than momentum as the Moon passes through Cancer.

FULL MOON*July 18 · 11:45 AM CapricornPENUMBRAL LUNAR ECLIPSE

Responsibility sits closer to the surface as the Moon crosses Capricorn, and it is easier to use than to argue with.

NOTES

July 2027

Your July Spread

Heat in one hemisphere and cold in the other make these weeks a study in contrast, though the lunar cycle underneath runs the same length wherever you happen to be. Anchor to that. Choose one recurring task, attach it to a particular point in the cycle, and let the grid do the reminding. Everything else can stay flexible. A spread holding a few reliable commitments reads more honestly than one crowded with plans nobody intends to keep, and it is far easier to return to.

August 2027

Your August Spread

August tends to carry a mix of winding down and gearing up, especially where a school year or work cycle is about to restart. This spread works well as a bridge month: use the grid to spot where energy naturally builds toward the later weeks, and save bigger pushes for those days rather than the whole month evenly. The notes space is a good place to draft what comes next without committing to the details yet. Keep this month practical rather than ambitious.

FULL MOON*September 15 · 7:04 PM Pisces

Pisces Moon days tend to soften and slow the mood: creative or intuitive work, tying off loose ends...

NEW MOON*September 29 · 10:36 PM Libra

Beauty and balance carry more weight than usual while the Moon sits in Libra, which suits anything with a visual or social finish.

NOTES

September 2027

Your September Spread

September resets the pace for a lot of people even outside a school calendar, and this spread is built with that reset in mind. Use the grid to match steadier days with the planning and setup work a new routine tends to need, and busier-feeling days with whatever requires more visible effort. If the prior month left something unfinished, this is a reasonable month to pick it back up rather than starting something else alongside it. Keep the notes section focused on one or two priorities for the month.

A Regular Part of the Cycle

However a void-of-course window lands in a given month, it's worth remembering it's a regular, repeating part of the Moon's cycle, not an exception to plan around with extra caution. Most days include one at some point during the Moon's roughly monthly path through the zodiac. Treat the marked windows on each spread as a heads-up for pacing, not as a warning, and let the rest of the calendar carry the actual decisions about timing.
